Poetry.

The Footsteps of Decay.

The following, (which has been often published,) is a translation from an ancient Spanish poem, which says the Edinburgh Review, is surpassed by nothing with which we are acquainted in the Spanish language except the 'Ode of Louis the Lion.'

Oh! let the soul its slumbers break—
Arouse its senses and awake,
To see how soon
Life, in its glories, glides away,
And the stern footsteps of decay
Come stealing on.

And while we view the rolling tide,
Down which our floating minutes glide
Away so fast,
Let us the present hour employ,
And deem each future dream a joy
Already past.

Let no vain hope deceive the mind—
No happier let us hope to find
To-morrow than to-day.
Our golden dreams of yore were bright,
Like them the present shall delight
Like them decay.

Our lives like hasting streams must be
That into one engulphing sea
Are doomed to fall—
The sea of death where waves roll on
O king and kingdom, crown and throne,
And swallow all.

Alike the river's lordly tide,
Alike the humble rivulet's glide
To that sad wave;
Death levels poverty and pride
And rich and poor sleep side by side
Within the grave.

Our birth is but a starting place—
Life is the running of the race,
And death the goal:
There all our glittering joys are brought—
The path alone of all unsought,
Is found of all,

See, then, how poor and little worth
Are all the glittering toys of earth
That lure us here!
Dreams of a sleep that death must break,
Alas! before it bids us wake,
We disappear.

Long ere the damp of earth can blight,
The cheek's pure glow of red and white
Has passed away;
Youth smiled, and all was heavenly fair
Age came and laid his finger there,
And where are they?

Where is the strength that spurns decay,
The step that roved so light and gay,
The heart's blithe tone?
The strength is gone, the step is slow,
And joy grows wearisome and woe!
When age comes on.

Miscellany.

HOPE RASHLEIGH.

* * * Grantley Watts was going to India. It was his last day with the well-to-do cousin who had been like a father to him; he had passed the morning in shooting, but when he returned he had only one bird in his bag; though game was plentiful this year, and he was acknowledged to be a first rate shot. His cousin, John Rashleigh, rallied him unmercifully, and Hope said in her most disdainful way: 'I thought the coveys would be tolerably safe, Mr. Watts!' But he only laughed, and admitted that he was a muff and not worth his salt—that powder and shot were thrown away upon him—and that he would make but a sorry figure in India where men could shoot—with other jeerings, playful or bitter as they might be; simply saying, 'Well, Miss Hope, you must have it some morning for breakfast when I am gone; it is the last I shall shoot, and I should like you to have it.'

To which Hope answered indifferently: 'You are very good, Grantly, but I dare say Fido will be the only one to benefit by your last bag; I do not suppose that I shall ever see the creature.'

Grantley colored; and Mr. Rashleigh himself thought she might have been more gracious just on the eve of the poor lad's departure, when perhaps they might never see him again; and after all, though he was a poor relation, and had very properly never forgotten that, or gone beyond the strictest line of demarcation, yet he had been many years in the house now, and Hope was very young when he came, so that if she even considered him almost as a brother, no great harm would have been done; and so on; his heart unconsciously pleading against his child's untoward pride, in favor of his dependent.

Perhaps it was some such half discomfort—it could not be said to be conscious displeasure—that made him refuse Hope's request that evening. As usual, she was out of funds; and she had a special need for money at this moment. She wished to help poor Annie Rogers, down in the fever, with her husband in the hospital, and her children destitute, and she knew that her father would not give them a penny; for the man had been convicted of poaching, and Annie herself did not bear the most unblemished character, and had seen the inside of the country jail more than once in her life-time. But these counter pleadings did not influence Hope; and she thought only of the suffering family, which she could help, and would, if she had the money. Then she wanted to make Grantly a present before he went away, and she did not want her father to know of it, though perhaps she would have been puzzled to explain why she wished to keep such a trivial matter secret. She had never given him anything, not even a flower, not even a book; and he was almost the only person within her sphere so passed over; but now, when he was going to leave forever, she would give him something as a remembrance—something that would make him think of her when he was away. Poor, proud Hope, come then at last to this!

She knew that her father had money in the house, when she went into the library to speak to him; for she saw him put a twenty-pound note in his desk yesterday, which was just the sum she wanted, and indeed was on the point of asking for it then. She would have got it had she done so; but to-day the vane had shifted, and for the first time in his life he refused her, and so sternly and positively, that, as much in surprise as anger, she gave up the point at once. But with a sudden flash of surprise and determination on her face, which he did not see, sitting as he was towards the light, while she stood in the shadow. And then she left the room in stately silence; too proud to coax even her father after a refusal so harshly made; though, had she coaxed him as Hope could when she chose, the whole thing would have been at an end, and John Rashleigh would have yielded. She was but a spoiled child, whose faults had been fostered by the injudicious training of her life.

The distress of poor Annie Rogers pressed upon her. Unused to opposition and in a mood more than ordinarily excitable, everything became exaggerated, and she lay awake through the night in a state bordering upon mania, feeling herself to be a coward and a murderess in not executing the righteousness of will, and taking from her father what he would not but ought to freely give. Was not humanity before mere obedience? Was she to let a fellow-creature die rather than take what could be spared so well, and what she had the right to demand? Yes, by right; her father's money was hers as well; if not by law yet by moral justice, and if he made a cold and churlish steward, it was her duty to supply his defects, and to let the poor benefit by his superfluities. All the wild reasonings of a wilful mind aiding the impulses of a generous heart passed through her brain that night, and when she rose in the morning it was with the determination to do her own will, and defy her father.

John Rashleigh was a magistrate, and to-day was market-day at Canstow, the town near which they lived, where the magistrates always assembled, in the upper room of the town-hall, and dispensed law, if not justice, on the offenders. His absence gave Hope the opportunity she wanted. Very quietly and very deliberately she unlocked his desk, and took from it the twenty-pound note. But though the act was shameful, she had no perception that she was doing wrong, beyond the consciousness of self-will and disobedience, which did not trouble her much—which, on the contrary, she had reasoned herself into considering the meritorious exercises of a better judgment and a nobler motive.

'Grantley, change this for me,' she said giving him the note.

'I cannot change it myself, Miss Hope,' he answered,' but I will get it done for you in Canstow; I am going over there directly.'

'Change it where you like,' she answered carelessly. 'I want the money as soon as you can give it to me, that is all; and Grantley do you hear? If papa asks you do not tell him that I gave you the note to get changed.

'Very well, I will not,' said Grantley, who, suspected nothing wrong, saw nothing odd in her request; and who, indeed, felt not a little flattered that she should have made a secret with him on any matter. So, full of pleasant feeling, he rode over to Canstown, where he changed the note and brought various things with the money, partly for Hope, according to her orders, and partly for himself; not at Hope's charge, it must be understood, the squaring of accounts having to come afterwards. And among other things he bought a certain camp apparatus for himself at Tell's the ironmonger's for which he paid with the note in question—that being the largest shop and the largest purchase.

Now it so happened that Mr. Rashleigh went to pay his bill at this same ironmonger's to-day. He took a check which he had just received in the market place from one of his tenants who owed him half a year's rent for his farm; and to save himself the trouble of going to the bank—banking hours, indeed, being over—he gave it to Tell, receiving the surplus change; among which change came his own twenty-pound note. Passing it through his fingers, and looking at the number to take down in his pocket-book, he recognized it as that left in his desk at Newlands. He knew the number, and a certain private mark which he always made on his bank-notes, thereby rendering them doubly 'branded;' and he knew that no one could have obtained possession of it lawfully.

'Where did you get this, Tell?' he asked.

'Mr. Grantley, sir,' said Tell. 'He changed it here not half an hour ago, and ordered this patent camp apparatus,' showing the young man's purchase.

'Mr. Grantley Watts?' cried John Rashleigh, flushing up; 'he changed this note here?'

'Yes, sir; I hope no mistake, sir—nothing wrong?' asked the ironmonger, a little anxiously.

'No, no, nothing! I was surprised, that was all; no, Tell, nothing more.'

But his face was more truthful than his lips; and Tell saw plainly that something was very far wrong in spite of his denial, and that young M. Grantley was in for it, whatever he had been doing. He did not suspect anything very bad. Canstow was by no means an immaculate place, and there were offenses and offenders enough as times went; but it was not to be supposed that a young gentleman like Mr. Watts had stolen a bank-note out of his cousin's drawer. Young gentlemen living in grand houses do not do such things; crime passes them by somehow; and the police exercise their functions very much in proportion to the yearly income. The utmost the man imagined was that Grantley had broken into a sum which Mr. Rashliegh had desired him to keep intact; and as it was well known that the master of Newlands had a high temper of his own and liked to be obeyed, that was quite enough to put him out, and to make his face grow so white and his thin lips so pale. At all events, wherever the fault lay, the lad was in for it, thought Tell; not without a kindly feeling of regret for the evil hour at hand. For Grantley was a general favorite in Canstow, and most people there wished him well.

Home came John Rashleigh in a frame of mind more easily imagined than described. Things had gone crossly with him for the last few hours; and John Rashleigh was not the man to bear with the crossness of circumstances patiently. Hope's extravagance had annoyed him; partly because some of his money matters had gone wrong at the same time; and, like most proud men, the merest suspicion of possible embarrassment galled him terribly; then he was sorry at Grantley's leaving, and vexed with himself for being sorry; for what better could a poor relation do? and if he had made himself useful, so that he, John Rashleigh of Newlands, felt that he should be 'quite lost' without him, why, that was only the lad's duty and what ought to have been, and he was worse than absurd to feel the least pain at his going. Then the magistrate's business had been worrying him to-day; and he had been on one side of an opinion and his brothers had been on the other and he had been forced to give in, which had annoyed him not a little; so that, when added to all this accumulation of disturbing influences was the sudden conviction that he had been robbed, and that too by the boy he had loved and cherished more than he had ever openly acknowledged, we can understand in what a whirlwind of fiery wrath he rode at full speed through Canstow, and up to Newlands, not ten minutes after Grantley had returned.

'Grantley!' he called out as soon as he entered, and still standing in the hall; 'Grantley Watts, where are you?'

'Here, sir,' said Grantley coming out of the drawing room, where he had been giving Hope an account of his proceedings, and emptying his pockets of her commissions.

'Where did you get that twenty-pound note you changed just now at Tell's?' shouted John Rashleigh.

Grantley was silent.

'Come, sir, I want an answer!' cried his cousin. 'Looking down and keeping a demure silence will not suit me; I want a simple answer to a straightforward question. Where did you get that twenty-pound note from? I left it in my desk when I went to Canstow to-day, and my desk was locked; whoever got it forced lock or opened it with a false key. It was either you or some one else. Who was it, Grantley?'

Grantley still made no answer; the truth was beginning to break upon him.

'I do not think any one in my household would do such a thing; two hours ago I should not have thought that you would have done it; and even yet, suspicious as the whole circumstance is, even yet I will accept any explanation that will clear you, else I must hold you responsible for the theft.'

'I did not steal it. I have committed no theft,' said Grantley, looking straight into his cousin's eyes.

'Oh! you may dislike the word, but that I do not care for,' said Mr. Rashleigh, disdainfully. 'I have always remarked that people shrink more from a word than a deed, and think themselves especially ill-used if called by the name of their crime. If you are not a thief, what are you then? If you did not steal it how did you get it?'

'I did not steal it,' was all that Grantley could say, repeating himself monotonously.

John Rashleigh was an impatient man as well as a proud and high-tempered one. At Grantley's second asservation he raised his hand and struck the youth across the face.

'Coward!' he said, 'have you not even the bad courage of crime? Dare you not confess what, by confession, would have been only a fault? If you had told me frankly how and why you had come to do such a thing, I could have understood it as a boyish iiberty, and have forgiven it, but now I have only one way of dealing with it—as a crime.'

When he struck him, Grantley involuntarily raised his own hand; but a thought came across him, and he retreated a step or two and dropped his guard.

'It takes the rememberance of all you have done for me, Mr. Rashleigh, and more than even this, to make me able to bear your insults!' he said, excitedly, his boyish face convulsed with contending passions.

His voice, hoarse and broken as it was, had somehow a different ring in it to that of guilt, and Mr. Rashleigh had not been a magistrate for so many years, and accustomed to all shades of criminals, not to know something of the human voice, and what it betokened under accusation. Grantley's startled him—so did the proud flushed face with the honest eyes looking so frankly, and the indignation rather than fear upon it—and made him half afraid that he had been too hasty. But men of his character do not long doubt themselves for good or evil, and while that one broad fact remained unexplained—how did Grantley get possession of money locked up in his desk?—he was in the right to suppose that he had stolen it, and common sense and the law were on his side.

'Tell me how you came by it,' he then said in a somewhat gentler tone; 'if I have done you wrong, boy, I am sorry for it, and we will not bear malice; but tell me how you got that note?'

'I cannot, sir,' said Grantley, his heart swelling.

'You will not, you mean, you young fool!' said Mr. Rashleigh contemptuously.

'I cannot,' he repeated.

'Then you will not be surprised if I send for the police? Here, Lewis. Lewis! come here! The thing must be thoroughly sifted, Grantley; and if you are guilty I am sorry for the exposure you have brought on yourself. It is your own folly, to let things come to such a pass, when they can never be mended again.

'To send for the police will not make matters much worse for me,' replied Grantley; 'the servants have heard all that has passed, and my character will be none the blacker for a public charge.'

'At least we shall get to the truth then,' said Mr. Rashleigh, 'which will be so much gained.'

'No, sir,' Grantley replied, firmly, 'I shall not even then tell you where I got that money from, or how I came by it!'

All this while the drawing-room door had been standing half open, with Hope close to it, listening to what was passing. A whole world of feeling had possessed her by turns—fear of her father, fear for Grantley, and shame at the false position in which her self-will and cowardice together had placed him—something, too, that was more than admiration at the constancy with which he had borne such pain and indignity that he might keep faith with her, and a kind of dawning idea that what she had done had been after all a sin and a dishonor, and that confession would degrade her forever—all these thoughts and feelings passed through her mind by turns, and held her motionless and silent; with ever the bitter recollection that Grantley was but a poor relation at the best, and that the distance between them was immeasurable, running like a sorrowful refrain to each. But when her father spoke of giving him in charge, and called to the servant, then she hesitated no longer. Throwing the door wide open, she came out into the hall.

'I took the money, papa,' she said boldly; and as she spoke she laid her hand in Grantley's, the first time she had ever willingly done so.

'Hope!' exclaimed her father, 'are you mad? You took that money? You?'

'Yes, papa,' she answered quite steadily; 'you refused to give it to me when I asked you for it yesterday, and I took it this morning. I wanted it, and you ought to have given it to me.'

'If I had thought that to refuse it would have made you capable of stealing it, Hope, I would not have hesitated a moment,' said the father sternly.

'I do not call it stealing,' said Hope defiantly. 'It was only taking what I had a right to. I unlocked your desk with my own key and, gave the note to Grantley to get changed.'

John Rashleigh turned fiercely against the youth. 'How dare you, sir, abet my child in her folly?' he exclaimed, passionately. 'What was folly in her, and excusable, considering how I have always humored her and acceded to her wishes, and remembering that after all she is a mere child still, was downright wickedness and dishonor in you. And how do I know but that you instigated her to it? How do I know but that it was your doing in reality, and she but the innocent tool of your cunning schemes? You bought a precious gimerack for yourself, and paid for it with my money. I tell you, Grantley, the whole thing looks too black yet for your whitewashing.'

'Grantley accounted to me for that camp thing,' said Hope. 'Do I not tell you, papa, that it was my doing from first to last? Grantley did not know where I got the note from. I only asked him to get it cashed for me. But I asked him not to tell you that I had done so, because I was afraid you would be angry with me, and I meant to tell you when you were kind again.' This she said coaxingly.

'I could not break my word to Miss Hope,' said Grantley, in a low voice, but firmly. 'Yet I should have thought, Mr. Rashleigh, that you would have known me too well to have suspected me of such a thing as this. What Miss Hope had the right to do was another matter, but it would have been a theft in me; and men (here Mr. Rashleigh smiled a little satirically) do not become thieves all at once. Yet I do not think you have ever seen much want of honor in me!'

'I will not have that tone taken,' said Mr. Rashleigh, harshly. 'You have done ill, Grantley, and it is absurd to attempt to give yourself the airs of injured innocence, and as if you had the right to blame me because I suspected what was so entirely suspicious. And what do I know yet? I have no proof; only your word and Hope's assertion, which, for aught I know, may be merely her generous desire to get you out of a perilous position by taking the blame on herself. I can scarcely believe her guilty. To have gone into my room in my absence—unlock my desk—take my money—I had refused her only a few hours ago—to steal—I cannot believe it! I will not! You have been at the bottom of it, Grantley; you have had some hand in it!'

'Now, papa, how can you go on so?' cried Hope, thoroughly frightened. 'Do I not tell you that Grantley is innocent, and that I have been the only one to blame? What more can I say to convince you?'

'It is not an easy matter to convince me that my child has committed a theft,' said John Rashleigh gravely, and turning away his head.

'I did not think of it as a fault at the time, dear papa,' she cried, flinging herself into his arms. 'I wanted it for poor Annie Rogers, chiefly; I did not want it for myself. Forgive me, dear papa, for having been so disobedient and willful, and do not blame or accuse Grantley any more! I have been the only one to blame, and he has been far nobler than I deserved.' Here she burst into tears and buried her head in her father's breast. 'Won't you forgive me, dear papa?' she sobbed again, after a short pause, kissing his cheek which her tears made almost as wet as her own.

John Rashleigh could not resist this.—Hope had never yet been unforgiven, even when she had not shown contrition, and the unusual softness of her mood to-day could meet with nothing but the most fervent response.

'Do not cry, Hope! Dry your eyes, child!' he said tenderly. 'There, there! Let us have no more about it. I quite believe you, and I quite believe that you did not know you were doing anything wrong, and that you were only thoughtless and impulsive, as usual. And as for you, boy, (to Grantley) I am sorry that I accused you so hastily; so, shake hands and think no more about it. You cannot expect me to say more than that I am sorry,' he added pleasantly, as Grantley, still hesitated. The blow on his cheek yet stung, and it was rather early days to take the hand which had struck him.—'No gentleman can want more than an apology, and a father can only express his regret to a son; so shake hands, boy, and let us all forget what has been a very painful misunderstanding.'

That word did what the feeling had failed to do. Grantley grasped his cousin's hand warmly; he had conquered all his boyish pride and manly indignation by the simple name of father.

'I have made you suffer, Grantley,' said Hope, as her father left them; and again she laid her hand in his.

'I would have borne more than this for your sake, Miss Hope,' he answered, pressing her hand between both of his, and looking at her lovingly—she not haughty and disdainful as usual, but downcast, bashful and repentant.

'I do not know what we shall do without you, Grantley,' she then said very gently; and as she spoke she turned pale, and he felt her hand trembling in his.

'Oh! you will soon forget me. I have so often displeased you, you will be glad to get rid of me,' Grantley answered.

'I do not think we shall,' said Hope in a low voice. And then there was a moment's silence. All this time they were standing with their hands clasped in each others in the hall which had just been so noisy and heated with the late storm passing through.

'You have not displeased me; It is I who have been ill-tempered,' Hope continued, in a still lower voice, still softer and richer in its tones. 'I ought to ask you for forgiveness, Grantley, before you go, for I have often behaved so badly to you.'

'You must not do that, he exclaimed hastily, and his eyes filled up with tears. 'I could not bear to hear you even blame yourself for anything.'

'Grantley!' she said; and then she stopped and said no more.

Still with her hand in his, still looking down on her as she stood with bent head and lowered eyelids before him, he drew just a shade nearer to her.

'You spoke?' he asked.

She laid her other hand on his arm.

'I am much obliged to you for all you have done for me these many years,' she said almost in a whisper.

The words were formal, but the voice and tone were not; the downcast eyes, the parted lips, the cheeks now crimsoning and now paling, the heaving breast, the pride swept away beneath the swell of this unusual tenderness and girlish gratitude, all told of something deeper and warmer stirring in that impetuous heart, than what those quaint, formal words expressed.

'Do not say that you are obliged to me for any thing, dear Miss Hope,' said Grantley, himself scarcely able to speak; 'it has been honor enough to be allowed to serve you.'

'Because no one ever . . .' He stopped in his turn, and said no more; then, after a pause, he went on: 'I have done nothing for you unwillingly, Miss Hope. If you had asked me at any time to give you my life I would have done it as freely as I would have given you a flower.—I have but one object—that of serving and obeying you; and I have had but one desire—that of pleasing you. I have done the first the best way I could, if I have failed in the last sadly. But I want you to remember me when in India,' he went on to say, 'and to remember me with as little dislike as you can; and I am so glad of to-day, for the last thing you will have to remember of me will be my faith to you.'

The tears were swelling in her eyes as in his.

'I shall never forget to-day,' she said gently, 'nor how good you have always been to me, dear Grantley.'

'I am glad you can say that, dear Miss Hope. I am glad I am going to India, too, though I shall never see you again; for if I stayed in England I should only fall out of favor again, and then I should have the pain of seeing you hate me more than ever, perhaps.'

'I have never disliked you, Grantley,' she said; 'I have pretended to do so, but it was mere pretense; and I have tried, but I could not. I like you better than you like me, Grantley—a great deal.'

'Hope!'

What was it? What happened? What madness took him? Neither of them knew, boy and girl as they were; but Hope found herself clasped to his heart, with her arm round his neck, and their flushed, wet, youthful faces laid against each other.

But they were not in smooth water yet, and had something more formidable before them than even their own misunderstanding and childish blindness had been. Though John Rashleigh might forgive a girlish freedom like that of which Hope had been guilty, it was by no means certain that he would forgive this far graver sin. The light of his eyes and the pride of his heart, she for whom lords and princes would not have been too good, to give herself away at sixteen to a poor relation! Hope knew all the trial to be passed through. It must be met, however, and that at once, unless she and Grantley would undertake a clandestine correspondence—for which the one was too proud and the other too honest; or unless they would give up each other—which neither would hear of. What she anticipated came to pass, in even exaggerated form. The father was furious; violent beyond anything she had dreamed possible; but girl as she was, she was firm, and Grantley would not yield her so long as she would hold to him.

Then came that terrible collision of two wills equal in strength, and a battle of love and pride which tears a man's very soul. Look which way he would, there was no comfort for John Rashleigh; and refusal or consent was equally madness and despair. But he must decide. The proud man had to balance with the father; and eventually the father won the day. Yet he would not consent to the marriage for many years even after they had come to riper age than what is generally held ripe enough; and when he did—when Grantley came back from India with a repute and character of his own, and his cousin found that poor relation and daughter had not swerved a hair's breadth from their young loves, and were minded to marry without his consent if it could not be with—even then, when forced to yield, Grantley found his roses decidedly not without thorns. His sweetness of temper, though conquered, before the end came; and when John Rashleigh was dying, he confessed that Grantley had been the best son, and the dearest, father ever had; and that now, when the things of this world were slipping away from him, and he was beginning to learn their emptiness, he was glad that Hope had married one, who by his better influence, had made her a nobler and a gentler woman.

'But you were a thief, after all, my boy, and stole a greater treasure than a paltry bank note,' he said lovingly, not an hour before he died.

NATIVE WINES, JELLIES, HONEY &C.

As was the case last year, the members of the original committee were absent, and the Trustees were pleased to appoint the undersigned to act in their place. The committee were somewhat surprised at the selection made by the Trustees, and are at a loss to know what peculiar qualifications they are supposed to possess to entitle them to the position of "Tasting Committee;" and they wish to add that it was with the greatest reluctance they entered upon the duties assigned them.—The contributors of native wines were not so numerous as last year, and the committee found no difficulty in testing all the samples offered. The committee commenced their examination with Mr. Thomas Simmons, of Waldoboro'. He presented ten varieties of native wines; the committee not having a list of the various kinds, will not attempt to enumerate them, but they voted unanimously that they were all very fine, and award him $2. The next sample presented was a bottle of elder-berry wine, by Thomas Herbert of Bristol—Capt Watts tasted several times, and turning to Gen Titcomb and Capt Gilchrest, who he supposed might have some knowledge of wines, inquired if that was port? The gentlemen had evidently seen the bottle before, for they knew it at once It merely shows the inexperience of the committee Mr Herbert has the reputation of being one of the best wine manufacturers in the State The committee pronounced the sample presented excellent, and will he please accept $2; The next sample presented was a bottle of red current wine, by Capt George W Brown, of Rockland In this case it was some time before the committee could come to a decision; several members were obliged to try the flavor many times before they could make up a verdict; and it was not until Mr A—— could see the sun through the bottom of the bottle that they voted unanimously that Capt Brown was entitled to the first premium, but owing to the limited amount of funds at their disposal could only award $3 The committee found some very fine samples of Madiera and red claret wines presented by Mr J L Giofray; not being native wine, could only taste them, which they did, and pronounced them excellent Hiram Hatch, of Rockland, presented two fine hives of honey, and we award him $2 Your committee also noticed two boxes of beautiful bread from the bakery of E C Moody, of Camden, of excellent quality In conclusion, the committee would tender their thanks to the inexperienced gentlemen who assisted them so readily in their arduous duties—E R SPEAR, JOHN T BERRY, M C ANDREWS, SAMUEL WATTS, J P WISE, Committee

HOUSEHOLD MANUFACTURES.

The improved facilities for manufacturing by machinery have nearly banished from household manufacture many useful articles formerly made, and the articles exhibited are largely confined to those of taste and ornament—many classes for which premiums are offered not appearing in the exhibition. Emigration to the South.

We regard the subject of emigration to the South as worthy to occupy a large share of the attention of the people of the Northern States, as regarded from three different points of view, all of which are important. First, we think it desirable to encourage Southern Emigration, because it affords an opening for hundreds of industrious, active Northern men to benefit their personal fortunes and to build up for themselves business and wealth, or obtain comfortable homes. There is the best land in the country to be improved, there are water-powers, good manufacturing sites and a wide field open to Northern enterprise and industry, in which it ought to find an ample reward. Secondly this Emigration is needed for the South itself, in order to rebuild its waste places, repair the ravages of war, and start it in a career of material prosperity. The Southern institution of slavery is overturned, but the South, reared under that peculiar system, does not know how to accept, and make the most of, the new and better state of things. Northern enterprise and Northern industry must go down there, to teach the South how to develop the resources of the country under the beneficent system of free labor. Thirdly, this emigration is needed to germinate and develop in the South the healthy elements of political reform. The South is not yet converted. It does not see as we see. Its people do not abhor secession and rebellion and slavery, because they have been beaten. They "did the best they could" at Rebellion, and we think are not yet by any means pleased that they did not succeed. They will make the best of submission and living in the Union again, but we do not think they yet feel glad that they were compelled to submit. The members of the South Carolina Convention may be very loyal, but when they ask for the pardon of their "former noble and beloved Chief Magistrate" who "led the way in our late struggle for independence", it shows where their hearts are, and that they still think the dead dog is better than the living lion.—There is nothing so good for the chronic humor of the Southern blood as a large infusion from healthy Northern veins. Let emigration to the South be encouraged.—Let Northern men go there, with Northern free schools and Northern principles, and the unhealthy virus will in due time be worked out of Southern society.

The following is from the Boston Advertiser on this subject of Southern Emigration:—

"Among Southern men who have the reorganization and future well-being of their section really at heart, the desire for an influx of new population into the South is as strong as anywhere else. The proportion of impracticable men in those States who are resolute to hold the acres which are worthless in their hands, rather than permit the free laborer to make his way and establish himself as a land-holder, is not large and is diminishing; and if it were larger than it is, necessity would soon compel a change of policy. The earnest and candid men of the South call for emigration, and pray that the emigrant may bring the free school and the church with him, and that he will establish an industrial community on the free basis. "I am tired of South Carolina as she was," says James L. Orr; "I covet for her the material prosperity of New England—I would have her acres teem with life and vigor and industry and intelligence as do those of Massachusetts." That is the aspiration of the Southern man who is really alive to the present position of his section, and it finds its best chance of gratification in the encouragement of emigration. Here at the North too, we believe that besides this social and industrial regeneration of the South and besides the gain to its material interests, the future stability of the settlement now made of national affairs, the health of political sentiment in the South and the enduring life of its new-born loyalty, depend in large measure upon the influence of a new population and the institutions and social changes which must follow its firm establishment."

Grand Division in Rockland.

As was stated in our columns last week, the annual session of the Grand Division of Sons of Temperance was appointed to be held in Belfast next week, but in consequence of the great fire in that place the appointment has been relinquished, and in response to the request of the Grand Officers, the members of the Order in this city have undertaken to make provision for holding the session in Rockland. The Grand Division will therefore hold its session in this city, on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M., on Tuesday. The session will be a very important one to the interests of the Order and of the cause in the State, and the attendance is expected to be large. Delegates will arrive by boat and stage on Monday evening, and by steamer from Portland on Tuesday morning. There will be a public meeting on Tuesday evening (the place for which will be announced hereafter,) which will be addressed by members of the Grand Division from various parts of the State.

A committee has been appointed to make arrangements, on whose behalf we are requested to say, that as they have undertaken the preparations for this meeting upon so short notice, and especially with a wish to respond to the best of their ability to the request to fill the place of the friends in Belfast, who have been obliged to relinquish the appointment in consequence of the calamity which has fallen upon their city, they will thankfully receive any assistance in providing entertainment for the members of the Grand Division and making their stay with us pleasant. Friends of the cause who may be willing to receive delegates as guests during the session, may (if not previously called on) leave their names with any member of the Committee, which consists of Messrs. C. L. Allen, Calvin Hall and K. C. Rankin of Hyperion Division, and Messrs. Z. Pope Vose, George W. White and Dr. C. N. Germaine of Lime Rock Division.

APPLES.—Stephen Barrows, Esq., of Rockville, has left in our office eight fine large French Russett apples, all of which grew upon a small branch not more than fifteen inches in length. The eight apples will average 3 1-4 inches in diameter and about 10 inches in circumference, who can beat this?

City Council.

The City Council met on Tuesday evening. The following Orders were passed:

Order raising a joint Committee to recommend what percentage should be paid the City Collector, for collecting that portion of the taxes remaining unpaid at the expiration of the time allowed for discount. Alderman Farwell and Concilmen F. Cobb and Hatch were appointed as that Committee.

Order raising a joint Committee to take into consideration the matter of setting apart a suitable lot in one of the cemeteries in the city, on which to erect a monument to the memory of the brave patriots belonging to this city, who have fallen in their country's service during the late war. Alderman Stanley and Councilmen Howes and Hix were appointed as that Committee.

The following Rolls of Accounts were passed:

Roll of Accounts No. 4, Fire Department,
Roll of Accounts No. 5, Pauper Fund.
Roll of Accounts No. 6, Contingent Fund.

In Convention of the City Council Dr. C. N. Germaine was elected a member of the Superinding School Committee.

Adjourned two weeks.

KNOX AND LINCOLN MUSICAL CONVENTION.—We are glad to know that the Musical Convention at Thomaston last week was an entire success. About two hundred and fifty were in attendance upon the convention, and the concerts on Thursday and Friday evening were given to crowded and highly pleased audiences. The liberality of the people of Thomaston in furnishing free entertainment for the members of the convention, was a very pleasing feature of the gathering, and was a material help to its success; and the managers of the Convention were very fortunate in securing so accomplished a teacher and director as Prof. Wheeler. The Convention was organized by the choice of Rev. J. K. Mason, President; Sam'l W. Jackson, Esq., of Waldoboro', Vice President; Geo. W. French, of Thomaston, Secretary, and W. R. Evans, of Thomaston, Treasurer. A Board of Directors was also chosen consisting of the following persons:—

Albert Smith, Francis Harrington, Rockland;
Paul H. Stevens, John P. Simonton, Camden;
J. H. Hobbs, C. D. Barnes, Hope;
J. T. Coombs, No. Haven;
Willard Hart, G. D. Strout, Union;
James Moody, B. F. Sprague, Appleton;
A. T. Webb, Newell Winslow, Waldoboro';
Rev. W. H. Evans, G. M. Thurlow, Damariscotta;
E. W. Dunbar, M. X. Chapman, Newcastle;
Augustus Fales, B. Wentworth, Cushing;
E. N. Henderson, Alex. Wilson, St. George;
Wm. Russ, Robt. E. Rider, Washington;
B. Ladd, S. J. Bond. Jefferson;
Frank Hobson, Mr. Baker, Wiscasset;
Edw. Bradford, Mr. Geyer, Friendship;
W. Woolredge, Alna;
Thos. Lewis,——Stetson, So. Thomaston;
A. Richardson, John Richmond, Warren;
T. Robinson, Vinalhaven;
L. Dunbar, A. J. Merrill, Nobleboro';
H. H. Blaney, E. H. Ford, Bristol;
E. Hodgkins, L. McCobb, Boothbay;
D. H. Gove, Edgecomb;
W. R. Evans, Geo. W. French, Thomaston.

This organization was made permanent, under the name of the "Knox and Lincoln Musical Association," and a code of By-Laws was adopted. At the close of the Convention appropriate resolutions were adopted, an address was made by Rev. Mr. Shaw, and the Association adjourned to meet at a time and place to be designated by the Directors.

A SUCCESSFUL MAINE INVENTION—MONROE'S ROTARY HARROW.—As an old farmer remarked at the "New York State Fair: "I am always pleased to commend any improvement when it is really deserving, and Gentlemen, I assure you with all my heart, I most certainly commend this harrow". So we, in common with the many throughout the country do the same. It is really astonishing to observe the favor with which this implement is received. It has been but little over a year since it was patented and yet these harrows are already in use as far west as Kansas, and Messrs. Monroe & Co., tell us that they have received application for territorial rights, from the far off shores of the Pacific, and as far south as Georgia. They have also received the first premiums at all the fairs where they have been exhibited. This certainly is marked success.

The committee at the Ohio State Fair, appointed to investigate into the merits of this machine, remarked that they could not say too much in its praise; their report was extremely flattering, and Messrs. Monroe & Co., cannot but congratulate themselves with the reflection that their harrow has been received with the most gratifying results.

The New York Tribune speaks of it as "A great and useful invention."

We do not know of anything offering greater inducements to those who are wishing to invest in some paying business, than this Harrow. We understand that the celebrated Ames Plow Co. of Mass.—whose capital is counted by millions—have made arrangements with the proprietors of this invention whereby the many farmers of the New England States may be supplied early the coming spring. We copy the following favorable notice from the Boston Journal of the 11th inst.

"MONROE'S ROTARY HARROW." "We call special attention of farmers to this most excellent invention, which is exhibited by the Ames Plow Co. at section No. 4 of the fair. It strikes every mind at once as being just the article that farmers have so long sought in vain. Its characteristics are that it opperates with a horizontal rotary motion, perfectly pulverizing and leveling the soil and evenly covering the seed. It is also perfectly simple in construction, the curious fact being that the rotary motion is produced with less traction power than a direct horizontal motion requires. This instrument has taken the first premiums at every fair where it has been exhibited.—Every farmer should certainly examine it."

☞ Steamer Marcena Johnson, of Portland, has been sold to Capt. T. S. Fuller, of Deer Isle, to run on the Rockland, Belfast, Castine and Mt. Desert route, for $4100. She is expected to arrive here on Friday, and will commence her trips immediately.

THE FIRE IN BELFAST.—We condense from the Progressive Age, an account of the disastrous fire which occurred in Belfast, on Thursday night of last week. It appears that the great destruction of property which that fire caused, might have been averted, if the city had possessed even the ordinary means of extinguishing fires. The timely expenditure of a few thousand dollars might certainly have saved from destruction property worth $200,000. Belfast had one entirely worthless hand-engine, and one other that could not pump its own water through any considerable length of hose, though in some respects, quite serviceable, and this was all. Rockland has a much better fire department than this, having two good hand engines, and the use of the water from the pipes, but Rockland wants a good steam fire engine and a system of reservoirs in addition, before it can count itself safe from such disasters as have befallen Belfast and Augusta.

EPISCOPAL FAIR.—It will be seen by advertisement, that the Ladies of the Episcopal Society are to have their annual Fair and Levee at Beethoven Hall, on Wednesday evening next.

OUR MUTUAL FRIEND.—T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS, Philadelphia, will publish from advance sheets on November 11th, "OUR MUTUAL FRIEND," Charles Dickens' New Novel, complete and unabridged, with all the illustrations to match their previous editions of this Popular Author's Writings. We predict for "Our Mutual Friend" a very generous reception, as it is one of his best Books.

NORTH BANK.—The annual meeting of the Stockholders of the North Bank was held at their Banking Room last Saturday, and a semi-annual dividend of 5 per cent. was declared, payable on and after the 20th inst. The following officers were chosen: R. Crockett, Azariah Stanley, Anson Butler, Philo Thurston Jr., Directors; John Bird, President; S. N. Hatch, Cashier.

☞ On account of the very unfavorable weather and other causes, the committee having the matter in charge, have decided to abandon the attempt to make a large public demonstration on the occasion of inaugurating the Statue of Gen. Berry. We hope, however, that our own citizens will, at least, gather in an informal way, to testify their respect for their lamented and distinguished fellow citizen, and their gratitude to the fallen brave who have died for their country, at the time when the Statue shall be uncovered.

HOPE.—The Scripture saith, that "Hope is an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast." It is the unfortunate's only comfort in adversity, and the star of promise which urges forward the struggling poor man. What is it that gives contentment to that mother who sees her darling child attacked by the ghost of the deadly croup, or suffering from the effects of a consuming cough or violent cold. What is it that wreaths in smiles the lips of that patient consumptive who, though she knows she cannot live, yet murmurs her silent and thankful prayer for ease and relief. What is it that has become a nation's hope—from North to South, from East to West, comes but one joyful response—Give us Coe's Cough Balsam.

☞ Fifth Avenue, New York, does not appear to suffer much from secession influences. Receptions and parties are as numerous as ever, and the increased demand from that class for Mr. Speer's Sambuci wine is astonishing. When the true analysis of its properties was first published by James R. Chilton & Co., those who could afford it immediatly adopted its use in preference to foreign wines. Prof. Chilton uses it in his own family, and has written to the public a card recommending it.

Terrible Conflagration in Belfast.

One Hundred and Thirty Buildings and Tenements Destroyed.

TWENTY ACRES BURNED OVER.

Nearly One Hundred Families Houseless.

A terrible and disastrous fire has swept over our city, laying one third of the most densely populated part in ruins, destroying many of the best blocks and stores, and a great number of dwelling houses. Many industrious, hard working people have lost all, and others heavily. The number of buildings consumed is one hundred and thirty. The burnt district extends from Lewis's wharf near the extreme north part of the city, southerly to Miller street, more than half a mile in distance and from Front street at the head of the wharve up too and parallel with Washington street just below High street, and the Phenix block, a breadth from thirty to forty rods wide, leaving but a single tier of buildings at the head of the wharves from Haraden's to Simpson's and a few small houses in the corner, between Cross and Front and Spring and Miller streets, opposite Simpson's and Palmer's wharves, and comprises at least twenty acres. The whole territory is swept clean with scarcely the remains of a wall left standing, or the charred remains, of a beam. It was convered mostly with wooden buildings, dwellings, stores and shops, and comprises nearly all the older and more ancient part of the city.

The fire was discovered about 10 1-2 o'clock in the evening, breaking through the roof and around the chimney of the boat shop of James C. Lewis, situated on the old common generally called Puddle Dock; the wind then being north by west and blowing a moderate breeze. The building was almost instantly in a sheet of flame, and the fire commenced spreading both in front and rear. In the rear it caught the hay barns of Crosby, Johnson & Co., containing beater presses; from thence to the store and store houses of S. S. Lewis, and the store of Josiah Hall occupied by Albert Hall. At the same time it crossed Common street taking the building known as the old Thompson, Beckett, and Creamer houses, and then commenced its terrific march up Maine street, raging with terrible violence; sparks and burning shingles being whirled high in the air and alighting in all parts of the southerly section of the city. But for the light rain that fell, early, the previous morning, wetting the tops of the buildings which before were like tinder, two-thirds of the city would have been in flames almost simultaneously. The fire was now fairly under way, and there seemed to be no escape from a conflagration of the whole city. "Water! water! for God's sake can no water be obtained," was the almost agonized expression on every hand. But there was no water in any of the reservoirs. Hydrant No. 2, the only engine that could be used had been placed on the extremity of Haraden's wharf, but it was dead low water, and out of reach of her suction hose, and nothing could be done in that direction except what could be brought in buckets. An attempt was made to check the fire at the corner of Maine and Pleasant streets by tearing down some of the buildings, but without avail. The fire crossed Pleasant street and swept rapidly up towards the Bakery. At the asme time it took the store of L. A. Knowlton on the lower side of Liberty square, while it also spread in the rear on Pleasant street. In a few moments more it had crossed Main street; and Blacksmiths' Row, together with the brick house of Mrs. Hatch and contiguous buildings were in flames. An attempt was made which came near being successful to arrest its progress on Pleasant street at the the house of Mrs. Sweetzer. Dr. Calvin Moore and others stove heroically to dislodge the flames on the gable end and roof, and, could water more promptly have been obtained, the fire could have been stopped in this direction, and it probably would not have reached the Morison block on Maine street. Attempts were next made to open spaces on each side of the rapidly advancing fire by tearing down buildings, but so rapid was the progress, that before they could he got down and the timber removed, the flames enveloped them, and the men had to desist. The wind now changed to north by east, sweeping almost directly up Main street. * * *

It was now a quarter to one o'clock.—The wind had increased, and came in squalls or gusts. Main street was a mass of flames on both sides, nearly up to the Morison block; the brick buildings of L. S. Smith, and of Robert Pote had caught upon the roofs, and were going rapidly. The whole territory to the wharves seemed a sea of flame, and the roaring of the fire could have been heard more than a mile distant. The streets were filled with teams removing goods from stores, and furniture from dwellings. On every side our strong energetic men were seen courageously attempting with ladders and axes and buckets to stay the progress of the fire, while consternation was depicted in almost every countenance. * * * * *

In the rear of Phœnix Row a small quantity of water was found in two cisterns, and this was carried in buckets by some three or four young women to men on ladders who thus held the fire at bay and finally with the aid of the engines, checked it. At the Whittier three story block, the fire was finally arrested through the almost superhuman efforts of Capt. H. J. Anderson Jr., Capt. J. Dunbar, Lieut. —— and men of the Tioga. Capt. Anderson at great peril climbed to the high steep roof in front, and put out the fire which was making rapid headway, while Capt. Dunbar did the same on the rear side.—These with the active exertions of a squad of men under direction of Capt. Charles Baker, finally checked it at this point.

It was now past two o'clock, and the fire, though checked at these points, was making rapid progress toward the south of the city. Every house on both sides of Spring street, from Cross street to McClintock's block was in flames, and the small wooden house directly in rear of the block was on fire adjoining a two story wood or out house, the latter being within twenty feet of the L part of Mr. McClintock's dwelling house. If the fire could not be arrested here, McClintock's house must go, and with it, doubtless both tenement blocks together with the New England house; and the fire would reach the heart of the city from this direction. The Searsport engine here again did signal service. The hose was brought around through the stable shed of the New England house, and extinguished the fire, and all danger from that direction was averted.

While these exertions had been making to arrest the course of the fire toward High street, similar exertions had been making down at the head of the wharves by Messrs. Sibleys, Fredericks, Knowltons, Anderson, Mathews Brothers, Condon, Pitchers, Mansfield and others to narrow its limits in that direction. By great energy and perseverance, they not only succeeded in saving their stores and wharves and the foundry buildings, but they narrowed the limits of the fire to above Cross street, soon after it crossed Federal street. * * *

Finally the fire, after extending to Miller street and consuming all the houses on the north side of that street, between Cross and High streets, except Mr. Lane's, was arrested at a few minutes past 7 o'clock in the morning. Never did day-light dawn on more tired, exhausted men and women. Never will the long, terrible hours of that night be forgotten by the people of this city.

The fire, t seems very clear, originated in the chamber or attic of the boat shop or building of James C. Lewis, and there can be but little doubt in any mind that the building was willfully set on fire.

The Losses.

It is impossible for us to give an accurate account of the losses, either as to the persons suffering them or the amount. We can only give some of the estimated principal losses, together with the amount insured. The section burned over, with the exception of a few blocks, stores and houses, was not the most valuable part of the city; still the loss, for the most part, falls upon those less able to bear it than those in the more wealthy part of the city. The total amount of losses will not fall much short of $200,000, and probably will not exceed that sum. As near as we can estimate about 40 per cent. of the losses are insured. From Mexico.

NEW YORK, Oct. 16th.

The Times' Havana correspondent has information of a very important insurrection in the Department of Ajacka, Mexico. The republicans had met with great success in their capture of Tehuacan, capturing greater supplies of money and arms than was supposed and were able to equip a large force.

The Iowa Election.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, Oct. 16.—The chairman of the Republican State Central Committee of Iowa announces that the election returns thus far indicate that Gen. Stone's majority is about 16,000, and that the Legislature will be about three fourths republican.

Fire in Harrisburg, Pa.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Oct. 16.—A fire which promises to be very destructive in its effects has just broken out at the residence of Rev. Mr. Jones in Tanner's alley, near the Capitol. The building is a frame house, surrounded by a large number of tenements of similar material, to some of which the flames have already communicated. The firemen are on the ground working vigorously to subdue the flames.

A Lumber Vessel Wrecked.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 15.—Brig Humboldt, of Bucksport, Me., from Bangor for New York, went ashore last night two miles east of Benton's reef, and went to pieces this morning. Crew saved, and also part of the cargo of lumber.

From San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—The loss of life by the explosion of the boiler of the steamer Yo Semite proves greater than was at first reported. Twenty-two whites and thirty-two Chinamen were killed and thirty-two whites wounded. The following are some additional names of the killed:—James H. Barnes of New Hampshire; H. M. Daken, New York; Louis Lillie,—he has a brother in Wisconsin; C. C. Jacks, San Francisco; G. L. Smith, Boston.

Business is rather quiet; high prices and limited consumption check speculation.

The receipts of treasure for the last nine months amount to $43,000,000, a gain over the same period last year of $2,000,000.—The coinage at the mint for the last nine months foots up over $1,600,000.

From Fortress Monroe.

FORTRESS MONROE, Oct. 13.—Corporal John Sheppard of the 38th U. S. Colored Regiment, was executed this morning at Camp Hamilton for a crime committed last April near Richmond.

The election in Norfolk and Portsmouth yesterday passed off quietly. The vote was small. L. H. Chandler, for Congress, leads with a handsome majority. His majority in Petersburg is over 100. But little objection was made to altering the third article of the State Constitution so as to permit late confederate officers to become eligible to office in that State.

The Pennsylvania Election.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 15.—Mr. John Cessna, chairman of the Union Central Committee, furnishes the following information to the Associated Press:—

"The result of the late election in Pennsylvania has not been correctly reported. Forty-two counties (official) overcome the majority of 1862, and leave the union candidates a clear majority of 17,000. The reported majorities in the balance of the State—24 counties—give from 5000 to 7000 majority. The majority on the home vote will certainly exceed that of President Lincoln on the home and army vote by several thousand. The union party will have two thirds of both branches or the Legislature. The union party gains in 38 of 42 counties officially reported.

Severe Battle with Indians.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—The Herald's special Washington dispatch says a telegram from General Pope gives Central City dates to the 27th ultimo. General Conner had surprised the Indians on Tongre river, killing fifty and capturing all their winter stores and 600 horses. Colonel Coles had three days fighting, killing and wounding over 200 Indians, and scattering them, with the loss of their stores, camp equippage and several chiefs. Our loss was not over fifty in killed and wounded.

Thanksgiving in Massachusetts.

BOSTON, Oct. 12.—Gov. Andrew has appointed Thursday, Nov. 30th, for the annual Thanksgiving in Massachusetts.

Great Fire in Chicago.

CHICAGO, 11 P. M., Oct. 16, 1865.

At six o'clock this afternoon a fire—probably the most destructive since that of 1857—broke out in this city and is still raging.

The Pacific Mills, Talbot and Company, have been totally destroyed. The building, worth from nine to ten thousand dollars, is owned by Z. Eastman, United States Consul at Bristol, England. The insurance upon it is not known. J. H. Morris, lumber dealer, loses fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, which is fully insured. D. F. Groves, lumber dealer, has lost two thousand dollars, covered by insurance; Porter, Ripley & Company, fifteen hundred dollars, with no insurance.

The Chicago and St. Louis freight depot, which was full of freight, has been totally destroyed; the loss will probably be about twenty-five thousand dollars, the amount of insurance on which is not known.

Several vessels in the river took fire, but were saved.—Cor. Boston Advertiser.

Fire in New York.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—The cotton warehouse of Harrison & Ostrey, on Bridge street, was burned last night. It was filled with cotton from the ground floor to the fifth story, and the cellar was filled with liquors.

Four thousand bales of cotton with other goods were destroyed. Loss, $2,000,000.

Precisely So.

The World says:

"The one overtopping issue, we repeat is this: Are you for or against President Johnson's plan for an immediate restoration of the Union? The Democracy from Maine to Minnesota, say yes."

A western editor, last year wrote: "A correspondent asks whether the battle of Waterloo occured before or after the commencement of the Christian era. We answer, it did."—Evening Post.

THE ELECTIONS.—The peculiarity of the returns of the October elections is that they all grow better and better the more we get. They show that the public sentiment is as sound and decided to-day as it was at the time of the last Presidential election—the falling off in the aggregate vote being simply due to the absence of any special exciting causes and the increased demoralization of the Democratic party.

In Pennsylvania, the corrected returns from about one-sixth of the State give 17,107 Union majority. The total majority cannot be less than 25,000.

In Ohio, the latest footings put Cox (Union) 24,863 ahead. The Secretary of the Union State Committee estimates his total majority at about 28,000. It seems to be the general opinion that Cox's letter on the separation of the Southern negroes from the whites had about the effect predicted by a distinguished statesman, who said when he read it: "There are 20,000 Union votes gone."

In Iowa, on the other hand, Gov. Stone (Union) runs nearly 5000 behind the rest of the ticket (which is elected by 20,000 majority) in consequence, it is stated, of his bold advocacy of negro suffrage.

In Indiana, where there were only county elections, the Union men gain in nearly every county, while in many the Democrats made no contest at all, The Lafayette Journal, for instance, says:

"The election yesterday was the funniest thing ever witnessed in Lafayette. Altogether it was a one-sided matter, the Democrats having no ticket in the field. The Republicans voted till they became tired of the fun, and then stopped."

It may be thought that there is no redeeming feature in the Connecticut vote on negro suffrage—but there is. This same question was voted on in 1857, and we find that there was then 13,793 majority against it, which has now been reduced to 6650.—At this rate a few more years will bring Connecticut all right.

SECRETARY SEWARD.—The Portland Advertiser in the course of an article on the Fenian movement, and the alleged course of the Secretary in regard to it having been declared that the Secretary had communicated to the British Minister, the secret machinations of the Fenians, says:

"We do not think it well to be too distrustful of Mr. Seward's management of our foreign relations. For all must admit, that he has carried the country safely, and peaceably, and with dignity, through the most complicated, dangerous, vexatious and difficult surroundings of those relations, that ever fell to the lot of any Secretary of State to do, for a nation. History will be consulted in vain for a parallel of like ability and success amid unprecedented difficulties. To keep a nation almost entirely out of foreign complications, and entirely out of foreign wars, when so surrounded with constantly multiplying complications of adverse and social, speculative, corrupt and filibustering, not to say piratical interests, merits the loftiest praise and gratitude of the people. Other men might have done it with equal success, but it would be difficult to name the man.

FROM EUROPE.

FATHER POINT, Oct. 15.—The steamer Nova Scotian, from Liverpool 5th and Londonderry 6th inst., for Quebec, passed this point this evening.

The steamships Teutonia, City of Dublin, City of New York, and America, from New York, and Hibernia, from Quebec, have arrived out.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A meeting has been called in London of persons interested in such of the old American securities as have been in arrears previously to or in consequence of the war, with the view of forming a committee.—The securities in respect to which this agitation is commenced are the bonds of Virginia, Louisiana, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and various railways and banks in those States. The whole represents a very heavy amount. The Daily News' city article says if the indebted States should stipulate for an arrangement for funding the arrears of dividends, it is probable that their creditors would meet them half way.

In regard to the published list of persons suffering by the confederate loan additional denials are put forth. The Times, in a leading article, terms the list a malicious imposture, and says the statement that the editor of the Times was a loser on confederate stock to the amount of £10,000

Later from Mexico.

WASHINGTON, October 17.

From intelligence just received from Mexico, it appears that 1000 Austrian troops left Jalapa and Perote to surprise the forces under the liberal Gen. Alatorve, but instead were themselves surprised and completely beaten by their enemies, leaving in their hands 600 prisoners, and all their artillery, consisting of five cannon, and in fact of everything, for the other 400 were either killed, wounded or scattered.

In the State of Oaxaca the liberal uprising is general, including all the Misteca, the coast of the Tehuantepec, all Canada the Tierre. Gen Diaz, who made his escape from Puebla, where he was held as a prisoner by the French, is now at the head of the insurrection in Oaxaca.

These Drops are a scientifically compounded fluid preparation, and better than any Pills, Powders, or Nostrums. Being liquid, their action is direct and positive, rendering them a reliable, speedy and certain specific for the cure of all obstructions and suppressions of nature. Their popularity is indicated by the fact that over 100,000 bottles are annually sold and consumed by the ladies of the United States, every one of who speak in the strongest terms of praise of their great merits. They are rapidly taking the place of every other Female Remedy, and are considered by all who know aught of them, as the surest, safest and most infallible preparation in the world, for the cure of all female complaints, the removal of all obstructions of nature, and the promotion of health, regularity and strength. Explicit directions stating when they may be used, and explaining when and why they should not, nor could not be used without producing effects contrary to nature's chosen laws, will be found carefully folded around each bottle, with the written signature of JOHN L. LYON, without which none are genuine.

Prepared by Dr. JOHN L. LYON, 195 Chapel Street, New Haven, Conn. who can be consulted either personally, or by mail, (enclosing stamp,) concerning all private diseases and female weaknesses.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

Manhood: how Lost, How Restored.

Just published, a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure (without medicine) of SPERMATORRHŒA, or seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, IMPOTENCY, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc; also, CONSUMPTION, EPILEPSY, and FITS, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagance.

☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents.

The celebrated author in this admirable essay clearly demonstrates, from a thirty years' successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife—pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately, and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

THE RENOVATOR is not a Dye, but a carefully prepared chemical preparation, which will in a very short time, restore the hair to its original condition and color; will prevent the hair from falling off, completely eradicating dandruff; will prevent and cure all diseases of the head, and will give the hair a clean, glossy appearance. It will in no case injure or discolor the skin, nor will it soil the finest linen. Finally, it is a perfect and complete dressing for the hair.

Any Lady or Gentleman who values a beautiful head of hair should use Giofray's Improved Renovator.

The proprietor is aware that every community is flooded with Hair Dyes and Hair Restorers, recommended by their manufacturers to do what the public have found them incapable of doing, hence, there is no little distrust in trying any thing new for the purpose of preserving or changing the color of the Hair, but he would assure the public that his Renovator will do all that he claims for it, in proof of which he gladly refers them to to the hundreds of persons in Rockland, and the neighboring towns whose rejuvenated appearance are living certificates of the fact.

WING'S

Vegetable Anti-bilious Pills

ARE the surest cure for Dyspepsia, Jaundice, and all diseases arising from a deranged state of the LIVER and Biliary organs; among which may be mentioned, Sick-headache, Nervous Headache, pain in the side, stomach or shoulders, and many other complaints, which either destroy life or its enjoyment. The remarkable and unparalelled success which has attended the use of these Pills for the complaints above mentioned, has caused them to meet with a quick and extensive sale, which has not been equalled by any of the most popular remedies known to the public. Concurring with this statement, Mr. C. P. BRANCH, Apothecary, Gardiner, Me., says: "I sell more of Wing's Pills than of any other kind."

EDMUND DANA, Apothecary, Wiscasset, Me., says: "The sale of your Pills is steadily increasing, and I find our own folks prefer them to any other pill."

Mr. BROWN, Apothecary, Damariscotta, Me., says: "'Tis the common remark here, that they do all they are recommended to do."

Dr. Anderson, of Bath, knowing the properties of these pills, recommends them in all bilious derangements, such as costiveness, piles, dyspepsia, diarrhea, &c. There are those in almost every part of the country, who, for months and even years, have been intense sufferers from sickness and pain, that have been relieved by the use of Wing's Pills, when all previous efforts for a cure had failed them, and many of them have kindly and sincerely given their testimony to the public, so that others that suffer from disease as they have suffered, may with them share the benefits of this successful remedy.

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, &c.

For the good of the afflicted, I would say that I have been afflicted for over forty years with pain in my side, indigestion, and frequently vomitings, and also symptoms of palsy, which had baffled the skill of physicians. I have received a permanent cure, by the use of some three boxes of Dr. Wing's Anti-bilious pills. It is now 18 months since I was cured.

Farmington, Me. EUNICE DAVIS.

Mr. SAMUEL LANE, proprietor of the Kennebec House, Gardiner, Me., says: "Dr. Wing, your pills have cured me of Jaundice and Liver complaint, with which I had been wearing out for several years; and I find them, both for myself and family, superior to any medicine we ever used.

Sick-Headache.

The first thing I can remember was sick-headache. For seven years I had not been able to do my own work. I had procured the advice of the best physicians, and treatment, but all seemed to be useless. Finally, my husband procured for me some of Wing's Anti-bilious Pills, and on taking them, my head was soon settled, my blood began to circulate more equally, and my general health to rapidly improve; and for more than a year my health has been good and my head free from pain.

EXCELSIOR

BURNING OIL

THE attention of the trade is invited to the above named Oil, which is pronounced by all who have used it.

The Best Oil in the Market.

The following are some of its principal qualities.

It emits no offensive odor while burning.

It does not readily smoke.

It burns with great brilliancy and steadiness.

It Cannot be Exploded,

and in softness of light is equal to Alcohol.

We claim that it possesses all the Superior qualities of fluid with none of the defects.

It burns beautifully in the common fluid lamp and far better than Kerosene in the common Kerosene lamp, with the simple adoption of Marcy's Patent Union Hinge Burner, which is simply the best improved Kerosene burner and the only Perfectly Safe Burner Now in Use.

It is a Cheap and Admirable substitute for Fluid, Kerosene, Camphene and Alcohol, and its perfect safety will commend it to an intelligent public.

The Best Illuminator Yet.

We have seen and tested, during the present week, a new article for giving light, which it seems to us is to largely supersede almost everything else in the market. It is the "Excelsior Burning Oil," an article which has petroleum for its basis and combines all the advantages to be obtained from this, with none of the qualities which have made kerosene and patent oils objectionable. "The Excelsior Burning oil" burns as freely as the best of fluid, which those of other days remember; it gives a light which for steadiness and brilliancy has never been surpassed; it is entirely safe from explosions; it will not smoke readily, is without odor while burning, and has almost none at any time; it does not spot woollens, or other clothing, if spilled, but on the contrary may be used for removing grease-spots. Add to all these that it is one of the most beautiful fluids to the eye, being of a tint between a crimson and scarlet, is warranted to last as long as the best kerosene, and is sold at as low a price as the same article, and we submit that a strong case is made in its favor.—Norfolk County Journal.
